Abstract

Previous research in multi-ethnic societies has shown that people rank, or form hierarchies of, the ethnic groups on the basis of social distance. Based on self-report data from a community sample (N = 150 non-psychology students), this study examined (1) the correspondence of ratings & rankings of six ethnic target groups among various subgroups of participants (Swedish & immigrant men & women), & (2) the relationship of inclination to ethnic ranking with ethnic prejudice & social dominance orientation. In accord with our hypotheses, the results disclosed that (1) irrespective of gender & ethnic origin, the various subgroups of participants ranked & formed similar hierarchies of the six ethnic target groups, & (2) people’s inclination to ethnic ranking showed significant correlations with their ethnic prejudice as well as social dominance orientation. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 35 References.
